M.A., Harvard University, 2009
B.A., Harvard College, 2004

BIO Brian Goldstein is a historian of the North American built environment. His research and teaching focus on the intersection of social movements, political ideology, and the built environment; the spatial implications of race and class; debates over design expertise; and the history of activism in the design professions. His current book project is a history of community-based organizations, social movements, and urban development in Harlem, New York in the late 20th century.

Prior to joining the School of Architecture and Planning in 2014, Brian was an A.W. Mellon Postdoctoral Fellow in the Center for the Humanities and the Department of History at the University of Wisconsin-Madison. He received his Ph.D. from the doctoral program in Architecture, Landscape Architecture, and Urban Planning at Harvard University. Previously he worked in the Office of the Chief Architect of the U.S. General Services Administration in Washington, DC.
