LEARN ABOUT THE HISTORIC PRESERVATION & REGIONALISM PROGRAM

Mission Statement:

At the University of New Mexico Historical Preservation and Regionalism Program, we believe in the transformative power of understanding and sustaining our shared cultural heritage. In an era where the preservation of historical and cultural environments is increasingly vital, our program stands at the forefront of preparing future professionals to address the challenges of our built environment history.

Historic preservation is not merely about conserving physical structures; it is about embracing the dynamic relationship between history and contemporary society. Our curriculum integrates rigorous training in history, theory, documentation, technology, and planning, providing students with a comprehensive foundation. Through specialized coursework and hands-on experiences, including classes and field study engagements, our students gain practical skills and theoretical insights necessary for careers in architecture, landscape architecture, planning, history, archaeology, conservation, and management.

Collaborating with national and international institutions and agencies, including esteemed partnerships with organizations and community engagement, our students benefit from unparalleled opportunities for study, internships, and sponsored research. These experiences not only enrich their academic journey but also prepare them to engage with the global and regional community of heritage conservation.

Our graduates emerge as leaders equipped to tackle the multifaceted challenges of historic preservation in the 21st century. Whether focusing on building conservation, site management, landscape preservation, preservation planning, or preservation design, our alumni are prepared to contribute meaningfully to the stewardship of the world's cultural heritage. They embark on careers dedicated to safeguarding and interpreting diverse cultural places, from historic towns and cities to archaeological sites and cultural landscapes.

Join us at the University of New Mexico Historical Preservation and Regionalism Program, where we empower the next generation of professionals to shape a sustainable future by honoring the richness of our past. Together, we preserve history for generations to come.
