R. Corey Clayborne, AIA

"For associate members, the AIA offers leadership training, licensure support, mentorship, topic specific knowledge groups, civic engagement, and very important networking opportunities. The AIA is a place for associates, whether or not employed, to learn about practice outside of their firm environment. When people ask me 'What has the AIA done for me lately?' my response is always 'What hasn't the AIA done for you lately!'"

Haley Gipe, Assoc. AIA
Member Since 2008

The resources you need for the future you want.

Membership with the AIA is an important decision as you develop your career. Entering the workforce can be challenging, but you don't have to take it on alone. Here are just some of the member benefits that can help you on your career path.

- ✦ Intern Development Program (IDP) support, including help finding IDP coordinators and mentors to educate and aid interns at state, regional, and local levels
- ✦ AIA Transcript to track coursework taken from AIA continuing education providers; each AIA learning unit is equal to one IDP Supplemental Experience hour
- ✦ Architect Registration Examination (ARE) study resources such as seminars and scholarships to support you in the process toward licensure
- ✦ AIA Career Center, an online job board that offers assistance for finding internship and professional opportunities

www.aia.org/join\_grad

* The AIA offers complimentary membership for graduates of accredited schools of architecture. Provide a copy of your diploma with your membership application, and you receive free membership for up to 18 months. (AIA membership is based on a calendar year. Winter graduates will receive free membership for up to 12 months.) Note that this promotion begins upon date of graduation and not your join date.

Your membership will be at the associate level until you receive full licensure and have the opportunity to become an architect member. The AIA is a three-tiered organization. Although your membership is at the national, state, and local levels, this promotional offer applies only to dues for the national component. Some local and state AIA chapters charge a nominal membership fee. For questions regarding your local chapter, call 800-242-3837, option 2.

"The AIA provided me with a scholarship to conduct my own architectural research. This led to involvement with my local AIA Seattle Chapter as well as on my Regional Board, doing advocacy, giving presentations on research, debating building code issues, and exchanging ideas with people I would otherwise never have met. Through the AIA, I have gained valuable leadership skills [and] connections, and pushed myself to become a [more] rounded professional."

Joseph Mayo, Assoc. AIA
Member Since 2010

"It's not just about what you get—the ARE support, the opportunities to build a professional network. It's about what you can give. The AIA needs your ideas, passions, and leadership. It's important for those of us who are in the early stages of our careers to get involved, to be a part of the solution."

Jared Hueter, Assoc. AIA
Member Since 2011

"There's a lot to learn before you get licensed, and the AIA is one of the best places to do that."

Teagan Andres, Assoc. AIA
Member Since 2008

"AIA membership is a two way street: the AIA provides me with resources and information on all aspects of the profession; [the] AIA also values my own participation—allowing me to play a role in educating and connecting with my colleagues at the local, state, and national levels... Being a member of the AIA has made me a better architect."

Sam Garcia, AIA
Member Since 2009

"Imagine having the knowledge of thousands of professionals at your disposal. The AIA gives me the support I need to navigate the profession and open a practice."
